New Year's Greeting Immeasurable Light and Life

At the beginning of the year, I would like to send you my greetings from Hongwanji in Kyoto.

Upon succeeding the position as Monshu, thirty-six years and nine months have passed. I have come to empathize with Chinese master, Shan-tao, as he writes in Hymns of Birth in the Pure Land, "Caught up in everyday life, the days and nights go left unnoticed, unable to become emancipated and escape the sea of suffering." I shall vow to work diligently until my term comes to an end this June.

For many of us, although the passing of time seems to speed up with age, in recent years, changes within society have sped up, making things all the more unsettling. Because these rapid transitions are largely the result of developments in scientific technology and economic growth, they sometimes produce discrepancies in individual lifestyles and societal framework. The gap among socio-economic concerns including business corporations and people's lifestyles are widening that both domestic and international efforts have not been successful in dealing with such issues. As a result, there is a sense that neither reflecting on the past nor thinking ahead into the future matters, so long as we are content with the present. However, this mentality will result in repeating past mistakes or passing burdens on to future generations.

Is it not that the role of Buddhism is to provide us who live in this constantly changing world, with an unfaltering spiritual foundation to live the life which we have received to the fullest? In Jodo Shinshu Buddhism, that foundation is the Primal Vow of Amida Tathagata, namely Namo Amida Butsu. Being unconditionally embraced by Amida Tathagata, we are enabled to accept our own inconvenient past and at this very moment, be joyous of this life we have received.

May we all continue to live every day of this year in appreciation of the Nembutsu.

My Appreciation for Shinran Shonin

By Rev. Kodo Umezu BCA Bishop

Hoon-ko

During the month of January, many temples and churches observe a very special service called Hoon-ko. It is a service to honor the founder of the Jodo Shinshu School of Buddhism, Shinran Shonin (1173-1263). Hoon-ko is the main service in our tradition and is the origin of our religious organization. The term Hoon-ko means "a service or a gathering to express appreciation" and is used by many other Buddhist orders in Japan. Therefore, the Hoon-ko that we observe is formally called "Shinran Shonin Go-shoki Hoon-ko" to specify that the service is a gathering to express our appreciation for Shinran Shonin on his memorial

My Childhood Memories

While growing up in Japan, during my grammar school years, my temple in Fukuoka observed Hoon-ko for an entire week, from January 2 to January 9. Though the observance lasted seven days, it required more than two weeks of preparation. About a week before the service we had to clean the bondo, polish the brass items and ornaments in the naijin, and decorate the altar. We relied on a group of five or six members called Hana-ko (Flower Arrangement Association), who were in charge of arranging special flowers for the altar. About one week before the service they went to the nearby mountain and brought back piles of pine and bamboo branches. They secluded themselves in a special room behind the hondo where they spent many days creating two pairs of huge, magnificent arrangements. Around the same time, a group of musicians called Gakunin (musicians) started rehearsing the gagaku music to be played during the services. The people of Hana-ko and Gakunin were dedicated members who were local farmers but had special talents and skills. A few days before Hoon-ko, we pounded mochi rice and made hundreds of tiny mochi rice cakes. These small mochi cakes were stuck on bamboo skewers, tied around wooden cylinders, painted, and placed around the shrines as offerings to Amida Buddha and Shinran Shonin.

Our Hoon-ko was one of the biggest events in my village. It required every villager to come out and help put on the services. In the morning of the first day, heating devices with burning charcoals inside (hibachi) were placed in the Hondo as we waited for people to come. The series of Hoon-ko services began with an early morning service at 5 a.m., then another one at 10 a.m. The afternoon service began at 1:30 p.m. and the last one was at 7:30 p.m. Some members stayed at my temple for seven days to attend each and every service. Otoki lunch was served every day. The menu was all vegetarian dishes. I remember sometimes sake was served. Many Buddhist Women's Association members who were in charge of cooking came early in the morning and started the fire in the kitchen. Their Continued on Page 6

The Significance of a Name

By Rev. Dr. David Matsumoto Berkeley Buddhist Temple

Nelson Mandela (1918-2013)

INMATE #466/64. Imprisoned for 27 years by a South African government intent on burying the significance of his life, he was dispossessed of his name and called by a number. But his name remained alive outside of the prison wallsamong those struggling for freedom in South Africa and those opposing apartheid throughout the world.

Nelson Mandela had many names. His given name was "Rolihlahla," meaning "troublemaker." "Nelson" was the name given to him by a teacher on his first day of school. At 16 he completed the initiation rites of the Mandela family's Xhosa tribe and was given the name "Dalibhunga," which means "convenor of dialogue."1

In his 20s he joined the African National Congress and became actively involved in campaigns of civil disobedience against the South African policy of apartheid. Through protests, strikes and later plans for armed struggle, Nelson Mandela became a leader in the movement to rid the country of its policies of segregation and inequality. A series of arrests and convictions followed, culminating in a 1964 trial in which he and others were convicted of sabotage and sentenced to life imprisonment. For the next 27 years he lived in seclusion as inmate #466/64.

But the movement for freedom in So. Africa was not forgotten, and people there and throughout the world remembered and spoke of his name. Finally, decades of struggle, boycotts, strikes, and divestment led to his release from prison in 1990. Mandela quickly set about working to unite the nation, not through retribution, but through forgive-

Mandela began to negotiate with F.W. de Klerk to hold the first multi-racial elections in South Africa. For their efforts, the two were awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. Then, in 1994, Nelson Mandela was elected as South Africa's first black president. He immediately embarked on a mission of racial reconciliation, government rebuilding and economic rehabilitation. In a unifying moment, he donned the green jersey of the Springboks rugby team - beloved by whites, despised by blacks - to present the World Cup trophy to the team while the crowd erupted in cheers of "Nelson!

In his later years, Mandela was known to his countrymen simply as "Madiba," a tribal name of great honor, "Tata" (father) and "Khulu" (Great One). His rejection of vengeance led him to assume rolesand names-from freedom fighter and prisoner, to world symbol, leader of the struggle against racial oppression, and president of a new nation. Nelson Mandela was able to regain his name and his humanity, and became a great beacon for equality and reconciliation.

What's in a Name?

In Shakespeare's play, Romeo and Juliet, is this famous line: "What's in a name? That which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet." In urging Romeo to renounce their family names, Juliet makes a familiar argument: A name is just a name. It is a word or label. It is not the essence of a person. Again, this is familiar logic. But, it is always true?

What's in a name? Certainly, our family name is inherited, and we keep it throughout life unless we change it or renounce it (as Juliet would have had the two star-crossed lovers do). Usually, our first names were chosen by our parents. Maybe they liked the name. Maybe it was the name of a family member or a family custom. Perhaps it was popular or unusual. Or perhaps our chosen name represented our parents' hopes and dreams for us. There are many reasons for a name and so there is a lot in a name.

A name tells us a lot about a person. It signifies meaning for and about us. What if we were suddenly to have no name? What would we lose? I think that we would lose a great deal. For instance, without a name we would lose our sense of identity. We would also lose our sense of connection with others (family, ancestors), our place in the world (community, ethnicity, or culture) and our sense of history. When we lose our name we also lose our face. We become a faceless "them," a number, or a byte of data. When we lose our name we also lose our voice. No one can recognize us or hear us.

That is why, as was the case for Nelson Mandela, our names are sometimes taken away from us by others, the authorities, or our oppressors. They may try to take away our names in order to take away our sense of self, our minds, or our humanity. But all too often we are the ones who let our "names" slip away.

Happy New Year!

By Rev. Kodo Umezu BCA Bishop

As we start the New Year, I would like to express my deep appreciation to you for your support and guidance throughout the year 2013 and ask for your continued support again for 2014.

When I took office in 2012, I emphasized that we need to focus on Buddhist education. Many people have shown me their support since then. The Center for the Buddhist Education (CBE) is now in second gear under new co-directorship and is focusing on fine tuning and enhancing the quality of its programs. The George T. and Sakaye Aratani Foundation has completed its pledge to the CBE Education Endowment Fund. Hongwanji has provided financial support to ministers in order to help them attend the Continuing Education Program held in Berkeley last November. The Buddhist Churches of America (BCA) Board of Directors was able to pay the remaining balance of the California Bank and Trust loan last year, so now we can focus on other areas. However, we still have a $4 million loan from the BCA Endowment Foundation that we need to find a way to repay.

Another change that is taking a place this year is a change of the editorship of the Wheel of Dharma. Rev. Ronald Kobata has been the English editor of this newspaper for the last nine years. I would really like to thank him for his dedication and commitment to our mission of sharing the dharma with all. The Wheel of Dharma is a great vehicle by which we transmit our appreciation of the Dharma with over 11,000 subscribers. We are committed to keeping the quality high and informing you with news and dharma related articles under the new editorial team of the BCA staff.

Our organization was founded 115 years ago with the wish of hearing and sharing Shinran Shonin's teaching. Our pioneer members begged our mother temple in Kyoto to dispatch ministers to this country. After World War II, the members' first priority was to nurture future ministers here in the United States, so they founded the Institute of Buddhist Studies (IBS). Today, we carry on that commitment and support the endeavor. IBS has just launched a new and additional fundraising program to support its ministerial students.

As time passes, we tend to forget the founding spirit. It is good to remind ourselves why we are here and revisit what our predecessors wanted to hear, so let me touch upon our basic religious practice. Our practice is to hear the message of Namo Amida Butsu. By hearing it over and over, we come to appreciate Amida's Vow and Namo Amida Butsu.

People of today including me are extremely impatient. If we don't understand something after listening a few times, we give up. Our teachers used to say we must use our legs to listen. That means we should make every effort to go to a place where we can listen to the teaching of Shinran Shonin. Shinran Shonin, too, commuted to his teacher's place when he was searching for spiritual guidance. He walked there and back for one

As our terrestrial home begins another revolution around and through the circuit of our solar system I offer the traditional Japanese New Year's greeting, Shinnen Akemashite Omedetou gozaimasu. At the same time take this means to announce the ending of my English editorship of the Wheel of Dharma. Nine years ago I was just beginning my "return" to the

As the Wheel (continues) to Turn

Buddhist Churches of America after enjoying 24 years of Shin Buddhist ministry with the Honpa Hongwanji Mission of Hawaii. As part of my becoming the Executive Assistant to the then Bishop Koshin Ogui, I was assigned to take on the responsibility of editing the Wheel of Dharma. Both responsibilities were very new challenges that my previous thirty years as a kaikyoshi didn't necessarily prepare me for.

As is the general rule in life we just do the best we can with whatever resources and means that are available to us.

For the Executive Assistant's duties I was fortunate to have the guidance of my predecessor in that role, Rev. Kodo Umezu willing and available to get me on track. The editor's role was quite a different situation though I did have the benefit of Brian Nagata who had edited the Wheel of Dharma in the past. He helped me locate a person to work on the layout of articles, advised me about gathering materials for publication, and the distribution of the monthly issues.

A few months into the role as editor I had a very fortuitous encounter with a young man for whom I had conducted his wedding ceremony on Maui years before. Just as the production person informed me that she would not be able to continue I was introduced to Jeffrey Kimoto. He was involved in publishing his own community newspaper, NikkeiWest, and handled a number of other newsletters and publications. Jeffrey contracted with BCA to become the production manager for the Wheel of Dharma / Horin (Dharma Wheel) [Japanese] monthly newspaper. Through his expertise as a publisher himself and generosity in sharing his resources for producing the Wheel we see the results in the full colorization and the layout formats he employs.

One of the major concerns presented at the beginning of my term was how to find enough materials to fill the six pages of the English section. Gratefully this concern did not materialize. If fact, there were some months that I had to decide which submissions to hold over for future editions, or to serialize over a number of issues. Though on occasion I would have to send reminders about due dates, and anxiously wait to see if an article was forthcoming, I've been fortunate to have many people lay and minister alike willingly share their appreciation of the Dharma in writing, report on special events, and give expression to the many ways that our "fellow travelers" (Ondo-bo) realize, experience moving on and live the Path of Nembutsu in America. I'm truly indebted to correspondents and readers alike for keeping the Wheel turning with their thoughtful essays,

On behalf of the Buddhist Churches of America I extend a warm Happy New Year's greeting to each of you. The beginning of the year brings forth hopes and aspirations, helping us to start the year with the beginning of a new life and encouraging us to successfully cope with any difficulties we may face.

Thanks to the hard work and contributions of many people, we can feel good about the foundation being built for BCA. From my perspective, we're a much different organization than even just a few years ago. Of course there's still much to do and I hope we'll always feel that way since it means we understand there will always be ways to improve our organization. Having the Nembutsu Teaching be a significant influence on the lives of everyone we're able to reach will be an ongoing endeavor that requires continued diligence.

This year is one of great potential as we've gotten past the burden of our bank mortgages and can now work on the remaining building loans from the BCA Endowment Foundation (BCAEF). Paying back our loans to the BCAEF may take several years, but we should be encouraged and very proud of paying off all of our bank loans.

I hope we can continue to build a solid base for propagating our Jodo Shinshu tradition. With the Center for Buddhist Education developing nourishing programs and with Rev. Umezu leading us, we're making good progress on fulfilling our mission of Buddhist education. We're moving forward on addressing the need for funding to reduce the burden for prospective ministers

Let's shout our love (Nembutsu) in the center of the Hondo!!

By Rev. Katsuya Kusunoki Buddhist Church of Lodi

Happy New Year! I always make resolutions at the beginning of the year. One of my 2013's resolutions was to make my baseball's batting average over .300. Unfortunately, I am not a good batter like Ichiro Suzuki. My batting average was way below .300. I could not achieve my 2013 resolution. But I will try to make my batting average better in 2014.

What is your 2014 resolution? Some younger generations may make their resolution to get a girlfriend or a boyfriend. These days may be the most exciting and fun time. Let's think about a general love story where a man tells his feelings to a lady.

A man has to ask a lady who he loves out on a date. He needs to invite to her to lunch, dinner, or for a drive. They meet someplace. They go somewhere together. He talks a lot. He asks some questions to get more information about her. However, it is very difficult for him to express his feelings. He hesitates to tell her his feelings. In his mind, he encourages himself, and at last he finds the courage to speak.

"I have something to tell you. The reason why I asked you out today is to tell you my feelings. I have a great affection for you. In fact, I love you."

Then, he starts talking about the reason why he loves her.

"You are so beautiful. You are my type. I like your ...whatever."

He sings his praises of her. And then, he tells his feelings again and he waits for her reply. She replies to him, "I love you, too."

When he hears her reply "I love you" he

When he hears her reply, "I love you," he rejoices over her reply. He starts calling his friends to tell them of this success story. He tries to share his happiness with his friends. And then, his love story concludes happily.

I want to arrange and repeat the order of

- 1. A man invites a lady who he loves out.
- 2. A man expresses the feelings he has for
 - 3. A man sings his praises of her.
- 4. A man tells of his love again and he gets a reply from her.
- 5. A man shares his happiness with his friends.

I think this order is very similar to our Buddhist service. Please look at the Lodi's Shotsuki service order:

Zaidan, Beyond a Rainy Day

By Ron Murakami

uring my years of involvement with the Buddhist Churches of America, nothing has been more mystifying than the Zaidan Fund. However, if you're familiar with the BCA Endowment Foundation then understanding zaidan is easy. In 1926, the Buddhist Mission of North America (now our Buddhist Churches of America) leaders, inspired by the visit of His Reverence Sonyu Ohtani, the 22nd Head Priest of the Jodo Shinshu Hongwanji-ha, to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Buddhist Mission, began discussions on establishing the Hokubei Kaikyo Zaidan (North American Overseas District Endowment Foundation) to expand the missionary work to all people in the United States and to ensure the future of Buddhism in America.

The Hokubei Kaikyo Zaidan was formalized in 1929 by ministers and lay representatives at their General Meeting in San Francisco, California. As part of the documents of incorporation, the Zaidan was established with a goal of $500,000 as its foundation. Emphasis was placed on the Zaidan to be a permanent fund with the corpus (principal amount) to be kept untouched. This goal was a staggering amount considering the time in history. The proposal came just after the start of the Great Depression in 1929 that was to become the longest, most widespread, and most severe financial depression of the 20th century.

Funding of the Zaidan was disrupted by WWII but was enhanced in 1945 when all churches were requested to have a special "Bishop's Memorial Service" to honor all past Bishops with the offertory earmarked for the Zaidan. Today, temples are still encouraged to conduct this annual service in Sep-

In 1959, the BCA Board of Directors adopted a proposal for a $1 contribution for each registration at all official conferences and meetings. This practice continues today at both national and district conferences and major meetings.

In 1964, the bylaws were redrawn and the Hokubei Kaikyo Zaidan name was changed to the Buddhist Churches of America Endowment Foundation (BCAEF), with the fund goal raised to $1 million, which was achieved in 1999.

The BCA National Council approved the Campaign for Buddhism in America in 1982 and the BCA Campaign - 21st Century in 2003. Both of these were capital campaigns that substantially added to the BCA endowed funds. The Zaidan was kept as a separate fund and in more recent years investment earnings from the Zaidan Fund have been used for special items such as assisting the BCA website start-up, for special programs and ministers' workshops, for start-up and ongoing funding of the Center for Buddhist Education, and more recently to help pay off the bank loan for the Jodo Shinshu Center. The decision to use a significant portion of the Zaidan Fund for the bank mortgage was the most difficult of the decisions to make, but thanks to the guidance of Bishop Umezu on explaining the original purpose of Zaidan, we reached a major goal of getting past the bank debt for the JSC by using all but about $500,000 of the fund. Thus this major achievement of paying off our bank mortgage loans was helped by the contributions of thousands upon thousands of individuals stretching over 80 years.

Our next goal for the Zaidan Fund is clear. We're replenishing the fund in the same way it was built up, with regular contributions at conventions, conferences, workshops, and major observances. One major difference is recognizing the need to increase our individual contributions to keep pace with the changing times. At BCA National Board and National Council meetings, we now encourage a minimum contribution of $10-$20 per person. Fortunately, we have individuals who now speak up and encourage larger donations, even offering challenges to match their generous contributions. At conventions, it's common to suggest minimum contributions of $5-$10 per person. This level is consistent with changes in the value of a dollar. $1 in 1959 would be equivalent to about $8 today based on changes in the consumer price index.

Thank you to the Officers and Directors of the BCA Endowment Foundation Board for introducing me to the historical information on the Zaidan that went into this article. Most of the detailed information for this article was taken from the BCA 75th anniversary and centennial year history books.

National Jr. YBA Conference

Young Buddhists are invited to broaden their horizons and form new bonds at a National Jr. YBA Conference scheduled to take place on August 30-September 1, 2014 at the Hilton Orange County in Costa Mesa, California, by the Orange County Buddhist Church Jr. YBA. OCBC's Rev. Marvin Harada proposed the idea to extend the traditional local event, the BCA Southern District Jr. YBA Conference to invite chapters nationwide. Driven by this concept, the hosts, OCBC Jr. YBA, has been busy brainstorming plans for the upcoming event.

The theme for the conference is "Plug Into Buddhism" and will explore the interaction between today's ever-changing world and classical Buddhist traditions, as well as the bonds that link us al together - no matter where one may live. The conference will conclude with a formal dinner and dance, and the Jr. YBA hosts hope that you can join them! For all questions and concerns, feel free to email the OCBC chapter at plugintobuddhism@gmail.com or go to the website - www.plugintobuddhism.webs.com.

I want to compare the love story's order with the Shotsuki service's order.

1. A man invites a lady who he loves/Sambujyo

"We respectfully call upon Amida Buddha, Shakyamuni Buddha, and Buddhas of the ten directions to enter this place of practice. As we joyfully scatter flowers of welcome."

Chanting "Sambujo" means we are inviting Amida Buddha, Shakyamuni Buddha and Buddhas of the ten directions here to this Hondo, the church's main hall. We rejoice and reverently welcome them with beautiful flowers.

2. A man tells his feelings/ Hyobyakumon

A minister usually reads the Hyobyakumon as a representative of all

"Today, on this occasion of this service, we have reverently come before Amida Buddha. With the deepest reverence and gratitude for the all embracing wisdom and compassion of Amida."

I confess my faith as I read "Hyobyakumon".

3. A man sings the praises of her/Sutra chanting

The Sutra, Juseige, is Buddha's words, Buddha's teachings. It is a condensation of Buddha's virtue, Buddha's effort, and Buddha's thought in this teaching. I am given this teaching, which tells me the truth. Chanting or reading a sutra aloud means praising Buddha's teaching.

4. A man expresses his love again and he gets a reply from her/ Nembutsu

Reciting Nembutsu is most important in a Buddhist service. Reciting Nembutsu is the simultaneous call and response between Amida Budda and

"I love you, Amida Buddha." "I love you, Katsu."

I recite Namoamidabutsu expressing my feelings, however, at the same time; I am receiving Amida Buddha's response with his compassion.

I express my feelings, "I entrust Amida Buddha. I take refuge in Amida Buddha. Namoamidabutsu."

Amida Buddha sends me his compassion,

"Katsu, I accept you as you are. Namoamidabutsu."

At the end, as a conclusion,

5. A man shares his happiness with his friends/ EKO

"May this merit-virtue

Be shared equally with all beings. May we together awaken the Bo-

And be born in the Realm of Serenity and Joy."

At the end of service, we chant these words as a conclusion. We share Buddha's teaching or Buddha virtue. We rejoice together and are born into the same Buddha's Land.

This is the order to express my faith in Amida Buddha. At the service, each of us is forming a deeply connected love story with Amida Buddha and our founder, Shinran Shonin. The Buddhist service is the opportunity to declare my respect and gratitude to Amida Buddha, and Shinran Shonin.

Don't you think that it is good idea to add "Attending Sunday service every Sunday" to your 2014's New Year resolution! Please go to your church/temple! Please go to Sunday Service. And let's recite or shout Namoamidabutsu in the Hondo, the church's main hall together.

HANFORD BUDDHIST CHURCH

As history repeats itself, in the late 1800s and early 1900s the Hanford area was supervised by the then Fresno Buddhist Church. Rev. Fukyu Asaeda traveled by train to Hanford holding services in private homes. In 1905 property was purchased with a house at 314 East 7th Street in Hanford, and Rev. Shuyu Sashihara was assigned to our area. This was the start of our church.

In 1916 a church was built on the 7th Street site and on April 30, 1916 dedication ceremonies were held and the Kings County Buddhist Church opened. As the congregation grew in 1927 a larger property was bought, the old church was moved to the new site, and the church was opened on December 1, 1929. The church was renamed Hanford Buddhist Church. In 1936, with the help of the Fujinkai and several families honoring the deceased Issei pioneers, the Onaijin we have today was purchased. On November 10, 1968 a new building was finished and the dedication ceremony was held. This is the building we meet in today.

As we near our 110th anniversary in a few years, the congregation is dwindling to the point where we no longer have our own minister. However, the Nembutsu teaching continues to live on in Hanford. And as stated earlier, history repeats itself. Today, we are once again being supervised by Fresno Betsuin Buddhist Temple ministers

"We learn from our mistakes & we learn by the help of other MAP attendees."

On December 12-14th, the BCA Center for Buddhist Education (CBE) conducted the Minister's Assistants Program (MAP) Winter Session at the Jodo Shinshu Center. Thirty-five participants gathered to hear lectures by Rev. Dr. Daijaku Kinst and Dr. Scott Mitchell, both on the IBS faculty, as well as Dr. Scott Wilson, based in Canada, (via Skype). Liturgy practice was provided by Rev. Katsu Kusunoki. Participants from several generations attended from 13 BCA temples: Alameda, Arizona, Ekoji, Enmanji, Fowler, Gardena, New York, Orange County, Sacramento, San Francisco, Seattle, Spokane and Stockton, as well as 2 from Canada: Calgary and Toronto.

> "From Rev. Kinst's chaplaincy lecture, I learned the importance of being grounded in one's tradition in order to receive another person."

"I learned the importance of having courage to be present in the face of fear."

"After a long and intense weekend of lectures and training, I appreciated Dr. Wilson's energy and was reminded that Jodo Shinshu Buddhism is 'engaged."

Why did Shinran Shonin choose the calligraphic written Name as the central object of worship?

by Christopher Caldwell

Shinran Shonin's decision to use the calligraphic written Name of Amida Buddha as the central object of worship serves a number of purposes: religious, political, and practical. Theologically, it draws worship and thought to the central focus of Jodo Shinshu: the Nembutsu. It is also a counterpoint to the tendency among nobles to embrace opulent forms of worship, with a great outward appearance of devotion, but little self-reflection. This gesture among the nobility was a result of the belief that the era was in mappo, or the decline of the Buddhist teachings. Shinran's reliance on the written Nembutsu provided a much-needed alternative to the nobility's mad rush to throw money in desperation for salvation, and brought the focus, theologically, to the truth of Namo Amida Butsu.

In a sense, Shinran's promotion of the simple focus of devotion, the calligraphic written Name, is as political as it is religious. As discussed in the monthly reading, the written Name serves as a powerful, populist antithesis to expensive statuary and forms of iconography that could really only be acquired by the wealthy. Shinran's approach not only corrects theological excesses, but also effectively moves worship from the exclusive to the inclusive, and puts the Pure Land within reach of everyone. Such inclusiveness can be viewed as a political gesture, as it runs counter to the prevailing notions of class providing greater access to salvation.

In terms of the practical, geographic complexities of propagation, the written name could travel great distances without appearing on the radar of the authorities. Shinran's choice was, in part, practical problem-solving. This is especially important in a period of such great political tumult. In many ways, it was a precursor to our more contemporary forms of grassroots movements, in that it is a piece of valuable information that can be shared easily and widely without the usual avenues of commerce and regulation. It is important to note that while a precious physical object, the calligraphic Nembutsu also has the potential for ephemerality, reminding us that the eternal content and beautiful simplicity live beyond the physical object.

It is interesting to consider that, in current times, one may still purchase very expensive objects to assist in worship. Followers of Jodo Shinshu are no exception. The business of religion is as much intact now as it was centuries ago. Just as Shinran asked that his body be tossed into the Kamo River, only to have followers erect temples and mausoleums, worshipers will always go a bit beyond the original intention of a sect's founder. Although, in one light, this may be seen as excessive striving, I think that generally these extra gestures can be in good faith, as anything that helps with propagation of the teachings is positive for the sect, both financially and spiritually. That said, I think that it is still important to keep in mind the simple and powerful elegance of the core teachings, and to understand that when all else falls away that the eternal truths of Namo Amida Butsu remain.

BCA Bookstore News by Gayle Noguchi

Now available: The Hidden Lamp: Stories from Twenty-Five Centuries of Awakened Women edited by Florence Caplow & Susan Moon with a foreword by Norman Fischer, paperback $18.95.

The Hidden Lamp is a collection of one hundred koans and stories of Buddhist women from the time of the Buddha to the present day - young, old, laypeople, nuns – all powerful teachers of the dharma. Each story is accompanied by a reflection by a contemporary Buddhist teacher, a personal response that facilitates understanding. Each story also concludes with a question for the reader posed by the editors to inspire further inquiry.

I recently had the opportunity to interview Rev. Dr. Daijaku Judith Kinst, one of the contributors to The Hidden Lamp. Kinst is a professor at the Institute f the of Buddhist Studies and Director of their Buddhist Chaplaincy Degree Program. She shared the following with me:

What inspired creating The Hidden Lamp? Florence Caplow, who edited the book with Susan Moon, has had a deep and longstanding interest in the koans and stories she encountered of women teachers. Many years ago she began to collect them and her commitment to making them available to others grew. Florence and Susan worked for four years bringing this book into being.

Tell us a little bit about the contributors. The contributors are contemporary women Buddhist teachers, both lay and ordained, from a wide range of Buddhist traditions.

Who do you hope reads The Hidden Lamp? This book was written for women and men who are interested in Buddhist teachings and practice. It aims at exposing readers to the insights, voice, and vision of the Dharma of both ancient and contemporary women Buddhist practitioners and teachers – demonstrating not only that they exist, but also that they can deepen our understanding of the Way.

What impact would you like The Hidden Lamp to ave on readers? To show readers the breadth and depth of women's engagement in and embodiment of the Dharma and to expose readers to the voice of mature and dedicated women practitioners from diverse traditions. RETROBUDDHA 2013

CBE Co-Director's Message: How to Listen with the Heart

by Rev. Marvin Harada

In the book, The Buddha's Wish for the World, by our Gomonshu, Koshin Ohtani, he cites a temple in Japan that has written on the wall the following creed, regarding how one should listen to the Dharma.

- 1. You should listen as if you are listening for the very first time.
- 2. You should listen as if the message is for you alone.
- 3. You should listen as if this is the last time that you will ever do so in your life.

It is easy to attend services and miss these three very important points. We attend, week after week, year after year, and we hear messages and stories that we become familiar with. As soon as we think, "Oh, I heard that story already," we turn off the speaker in our minds and our thoughts change channels to think of something else, like what we might have for lunch after attending service. But this creed reminds us to listen as if it is the first time. Think of how you felt on the first day of school, or the first day of college, or the first day on the job. It was nervous, exciting, and challenging, all at once. Even if we hear a story that we have heard dozens of times, each time we hear it, it is different, based on our mood, feeling, and life experiences. If we listen as if it is the first time, then we can always find something meaningful in the message, even if we have heard the story dozens of times.

Secondly, we should listen as if it is for you alone. This is a very subtle point that is very easy to miss. We could attend the temple and listen to the Dharma our whole lives and miss this crucial point.

Once I spoke at another temple and after the service, during the refreshments, a lady came up to me and complimented me on my sermon. She felt that my message on self-centeredness was very important. I thought, "Gee, this lady was really listening." But then, in the next sentence she said, "But you know what? The one person who really needed to listen to that message was my husband. He is the most self-centered guy! He should have been here to listen to your message."

This lady missed the whole point of the sermon. Shinran Shonin always takes a subjective perspective when he reflected on the teachings. The teachings were not talking about someone else's self-centeredness, it was talking about his.

The third most important point in listening is the fact that we should listen as if today might be the last time. If we think that we always have next week, or next month, or next year to listen, we will never listen with a sense of urgency. One never knows what might happen even tomorrow, so we must listen as if today might be the last time.

As we begin a new year, these three important points should be a model for us to follow as Shin Buddhists. To listen as if it is the first time, to listen as if the message is meant for you alone, and to listen as if it might be the last time you will be able to listen. If we listen with these three principles in mind, we will truly be listening with our heart.

dedication was remarkable. They prepared and served hundreds of meals every day for seven days.

We invited a guest speaker for Hoon-ko called the Hongwanji Fukyoshi (certified speaker). He stayed with us for the entire seven day period and delivered about 30 messages. It was like a weeklong seminar and religious festival, but I was too young to sit through all of the dharma messages.

Sometimes it snowed. It was the coldest time of the year, yet people came with smiles on their faces. I remember laughter and friendly conversations inside and outside of the Hondo. Outside was cold, but there was a warm atmosphere around the temple compound. The nembutsu came out of people's mouths spontaneously. The sound of Shoshin-ge chanting, the beautiful, ancient melody of Shoya Raisan-ge, the flickering flames of big red candles, the gagaku music, the sound of the bell, the smell of incense, the delicious otoki meals, and the nembutsu utterance are all fond memories now.

My role (besides helping to make mochi) was to attend the services. My older brother and I had to wear specially made robes and sit next to our father and chant. On the last day, sitting on the guest speaker's stage in front of everyone, I had to read a letter written by Rennyo Shonin. I remember not looking forward to it, but it made our elder members very happy, as I recall.

Who is Shinran Shonin?

When I was growing up I had no idea who Shinran Shonin was, but I was always part of Shinran Shonin's sangha. I knew his name through reading a comic book but had no idea what he had taught or done. It was much later in my life when he became a special person to me. Now I love him so much and I want to know more and more about him; or I should say, I respect him and appreciate all that he did. Reflecting on my childhood, I am especially grateful to my parents and temple members who gave me the chance to stay close to

Before and during Shinran Shonin's time, Buddhism existed just for the elite classes. The Dharma was for the Imperial family and some monks and priests. Shinran Shonin, after realizing the true essence of Shakyamuni Buddha's teaching through Honen Shonin, brought the teaching to all the people. He shared the message of the Great Vessel (Mahayana) that carries everyone to the realm of ultimate Oneness with only one condition; that is, to hear and appreciate the reason that no conditions are required of us. Age, class, gender; whether ordained or not, single or married, and even the state of our minds are of no concern. This is what Shakyamuni Buddha said, and what Shinran Shonin taught. They had shown us not to rely on our foolish and unreliable minds.

The true Dharma made Shinran Shonin realize that we do not need to pray to a supernatural being for anything. The Dharma taught him that everything happens due to countless causes and conditions. He knew the law of causation. He taught people to live their lives according to the law of causation. His teaching freed people from superstitious beliefs so they could focus on their livelihoods as ordinary people.

The Pure Land teaching really awakened and humbled Shinran Shonin. He deeply appreciated the kindness of Shakyamuni Buddha, successive masters and teachers who had taught and passed the teaching down

As I live my life, I appreciate his teaching more and more. I am just one being in this universe but I feel so fortunate to be able to hear his mesthat I mean that I grew up with people who were inspired by Shinran Shonin. Shinran Shonin may have been a great individual, but those people who lived in my home town were as great as he. They might have not had schooling in the Jodo Shinshu teaching, but they lived it. They were simple, sincere, humble, and hardworking. They were down-to-earth people.

I believe that our Issei pioneers were like them. They came to this country to find a new life. They encountered indescribable hardships here, yet they were able to live through them. I know they treasured their temples and churches. This was their home. Home is where one can truly be oneself. Home is where we are accepted as we are.

The Jodo Shinshu teaching provides us with a Real Home where we can be ourselves. It is the place where we feel that we are loved and cared for in spite of our karmic differences. Shinran Shonin is inviting us to get on the Great Vessel and come and join him at his Home through the Hoonko service. Let us hear his invitation. Let us get to know him. He will be our

I would like to conclude my article by sharing Shinran Shonin's last

Like the high waves that constantly flow back and forth in the Bay of Waka, I, too, will go back and forth to this world to spread the compassion of Amida. When you are alone and find happiness, think that there are two, and when two of you find happiness, think that there are three; that other is, indeed, Shinran.

Optional Reading

Some time ago, I read an article in a Japanese weekly magazine. I forgot the name of the magazine, but according to the article, Waseda University in Tokyo did some very interesting research. Their research was to find out who among all the figures in Japanese history was most studied, researched, or written about. They listed all existing papers, theses, books, and articles written after the Meiji Era and tallied them. And to their surprise, they found that Shinran Shonin was by far the number one person whom people had studied and written about.

Shinran Shonin is not only well researched and studied in Japan, but is also one of the world's most influential persons, according to D. T. Suzuki. He wrote the following:

The Japanese may not have offered very many original ideas to world thought or world culture, but in Shin we find a major contribution that the Japanese can make to the world and to all other Buddhist Schools. (D. T. Suzuki, Buddha of Infinite Light (Boston & London: Shambhala, 1998), p. 21)

Rev. Matsumoto

We just go through the motions, living out each day without thoughts, questions, hope, or faith. We allow others to determine how we should think or who we should be. And we thereby lose our sense of identity, connection with others, place in the world, sense of history, and our sense of value, worth and responsibil-

So it is important to have a "name." It might be said that when a person is able to take her or his "name," she or he is truly able to live. When a person is able to be "named," she can be identified and known as a human being; he can be seen and heard. A person with a "name" can be the recipient and giver of meaning and value.

Revealing a Name

In Buddhism as well there is an understanding that a name is not just a label. A name can become an expression of the significance of a person's life; a person can come to embody the significance of one's name.

Certainly, we know the historical Buddha by his names: "Siddhārtha" (his given name), "Gautama" (his family name), or "Sakyāmuni" (sage of the Śakyā clan). However, the Buddha is more often referred to by his ten titles, which include tathâgata ("thus-gone" & "thus-come"), arhat (one worthy of alms-giving), anuttara (unsurpassed), samyak-sambuddha (fully enlightened), and buddha-bhagavat (the awakened one & world-honored one).

Shinran also had many names: "Matsuwakamaru" (his birth name), "Hannen," "Shakkū," and "Zenshin" (his priestly names), and "Fujii Yoshizane" (a name forced upon him by the authorities). However, Shinran finally realized his true self and revealed his true name, "Gutoku Shinran, disciple of Sakyamuni." In so doing, he realized his humanity and revealed to us-through his life and teaching-that we can do so as well.

Shinran teaches us to say the nembutsu (Namu Amida Butsu) and entrust in Amida Buddha's Primal Vow throughout our lives-everyday, at any time, place or circumstance. For as we say the nembutsu, we come to hear the nembutsu. And as we hear the nembutsu we come to realize that the nembutsu is really the Buddha's voice—Namu Amida Butsu is really the Buddha's Name. As Shinran says, "'Compassionate means' refers to manifesting form, revealing a name, and making itself known to sentient beings. It refers to Amida Buddha."2

As we hear Amida's voice, the infinite wisdom and compassion of the Buddha is revealed to us as Name—Namu Amida Butsu. We awaken to the reality of Amida Buddha's Primal Vow-the basic of wish of life, which is to become itself and give itself to others (us) that that we may live. As we hear the Buddha's Name, we find ourselves living within the Buddha's Vow. We find that we can make that Vow our own and become fully engaged in striving to realize freedom and equality throughout the world. Then, like Sakyamuni Buddha and Shinran Shōnin we can come to realize our own true "names" and become truly able to live. And like Nelson Mandela, as we realize our "names" together with all other beings, all of our faces will come to be seen and our voices will come to be heard. And the significance of our lives will be shared with all beings in harmony, reconciliation, and love.

BCA Sangha. BCA and the Endowment Foundation are working together to develop ideas for paying back the BCAEF loans and this cooperative relationship will benefit both organizations. We're also jointly working on development and fundraising that will help BCA meet current and long term financial needs. Like most all non-profit organizations, we rely on continued donations for funding since endowments rarely provide full funding on their own.

We're also taking a strong look at how we can better help our temples and churches.

We can achieve great things when working together.

If you're one to make New Year's resolutions and don't already attend your temple or church on a regular basis, I encourage you to do so starting this year. Some people attend church primarily to learn about the Buddha Dharma while others may appreciate the social aspects of being with others. Both actions are important. Being among others offers opportunities to learn firsthand about fundamental Buddhist teachings, such as understanding the issues created by our own egos and the value of compassionate hearts. In this way, social interaction with fellow sangha members is an essential part of our Jodo Shinshu practice. In addition, from a ing at the temple can provide efficient communications and a good way to understand the workings of the sangha, two things that are essential to taking care of our temples.

Our last travels for BCA in 2013 ended with the National Board Meeting at the Jodo Shinshu Center (JSC) on Dec. 7, and a wonderful experience visiting with friends and acquaintances who were working at the JSC during the same weekend. The time we shared with these individuals lasted but a few minutes each but the experience captured the feelings from our various trips during the year. We were very fortunate to be among such thoughtful, sincere, and positive people. Thank you to all for helping brighten the Coincidentally nine years of Wheel of Dharmas calculates out to 108 issues. As many of you are familiar, in the Buddhist view, 108 represents the variety of afflictions that the human condition is subject to.
